Contributors to this Issue

Barrs, Keith

Keith Barrs is a professor in the English Department of Hiroshima Shudo University, Japan. He received his Ph.D. in Research in English from the University of Leicester, England, and his M.A. in Applied Linguistics and TEFL from the University of Portsmouth, England. His primary research interest lies in the corpus-based analysis of English loanwords in the Japanese language.

Burden, Tyler

Tyler Burden is an Associate Professor in the Faculty of Education at Meisei University, Japan. He holds an M.A. in Applied Linguistics and TESOL from the University of Leicester in the UK and a Postgraduate Certificate in Education from the University of Nottingham in the UK. His research interests include L2 vocabulary acquisition, testing and course evaluation. He has written (or co-written) several textbooks and graded readers for learners of English.

Chan, Daniel Kwang Guan

Daniel Kwang Guan Chan is Senior Lecturer of French and Assistant Director at the National University of Singapore Centre for Language Studies. Having earned his PhD from Université Denis-Diderot (Paris-7), he has been teaching French for twenty years, recently winning the Faculty Teaching Excellence Award for four consecutive years and the University Teaching Excellence Award in AY2017/2018. An associate member of PLIDAM (EA 4514), a research team at INALCO (France), and currently Editor-in-Chief of this journal, he has published three edited volumes as well as several articles in linguistics and language teaching.

Chan, Wai Meng

Wai Meng Chan received his M.A. and Dr. phil. degrees in German Language and Literature from the German Universities of Würzburg and Kassel, respectively. He is an Associate Professor at the Centre for Language Studies of the National University of Singapore. His research currently focuses on intercultural language learning, learner autonomy and metacognition, and the application of new technologies in language learning. He has published several books as well as numerous book chapters and journal articles in these fields. He had served and is still sitting on the editorial boards of numerous international journals.

Chi, Seo Won

Seo Won Chi is a senior lecturer and has been teaching Korean language at the National University of Singapore since 2007. Her research interests are in intercultural language education, blended learning and materials development. She is currently focusing on research into intercultural mediation among foreign language learners in Singapore.

Chin, Kwee Nyet

Assoc Prof Kwee Nyet Chin received her M.A. and Dr. Phil. degrees from the National University of Singapore and Hong Kong University, respectively. She served as Deputy Director of the Centre for Language Studies and Convenor of Chinese Language Programme. Her research currently focuses on the teaching of Chinese as a second language and the use of IT in Chinese language teaching.
Contributors to this Issue

Christensen, Motoko Iseki

Motoko Iseki Christensen has taught Japanese widely in Australia at universities and schools, and recently at the National University of Singapore. As a developer of Japanese teaching curricula, she has created computer-assisted distance-based language learning programs designed for language teachers. She holds a PhD from the University of New South Wales, Australia (thesis: “Online activities for learning Japanese as a foreign language”), and a BAdipEd and Master of Applied Linguistics from Macquarie University. Related research interests include the development of language programs, online teaching/learning, and linguistic applications of sociocultural theory.

Cripps, Tony

Dr. Tony Cripps has been teaching in Japan for over thirty years. He is a Professor of English at Nanzan University where he teaches courses in applied linguistics and pedagogical innovation. His research interests include learner autonomy, material design, emerging technology, and teacher training. He is currently working on a major research project which aims to provide pedagogical support for Japanese teachers of English.

Horiuchi, Hitoshi

Hitoshi Horiuchi is Associate Professor in Japanese Language Teaching Practice, Graduate School of Global Communication and Language, Akita International University, where he teaches pedagogical grammar of Japanese and supervises teaching practices. He received a B.A. in International Studies from Meiji Gakuin University, an M.A. in Linguistics from the University of Tokyo, and a Ph.D. in Linguistics from the University of Texas at Austin. His research interests include (Japanese) linguistics, teaching Japanese as a foreign language, and teaching culture in the classroom. His recent works focus on learner corpus research, corpus linguistics, and the pedagogical grammar of Japanese.

Keyes, Christopher J.

Christopher J. Keyes (b. 1963) began his career as a pianist, winning many competitions and later making his “double-debut” in Carnegie Hall. He continued his musical training at the Eastman School of Music, completing his doctorate in 1992. Since the late 1990s, his work has focused on electro-acoustic music, multi-channel audio, and more recently real-time computer graphics. He is currently a Professor at Hong Kong Baptist University where he directs the Electro-acoustic Music Centre and the Laboratory for Immersive Art & Technology.

Klayklueng, Sasiwimol

Sasiwimol Klayklueng is Senior Lecturer for Thai as a foreign language at the Centre for Language Studies of the National University of Singapore. Her current research interests include intercultural education in foreign language studies, teaching materials development and technology-enhanced language learning.

Kukulska-Hulme, Agnes

Agnes Kukulska-Hulme is Professor of Learning Technology and Communication in the Institute of Educational Technology at The Open University, UK, where she leads the Future Learning
Research and Innovation Programme. Her work encompasses online distance education, mobile learning and language learning. Professor Kukulska-Hulme is on the Editorial Boards of ReCALL, RPTEL, System, and the International Journal of Mobile and Blended Learning. She has been an invited Visiting Scholar in Australia, China, Singapore, Spain and Taiwan, and an invited speaker at over 100 international conferences and events.

Liao, Bozheng

Bozheng Liao currently works as an English teacher at Guangzhou Kaiyuan School, a K-12 school in Guangzhou, China. After obtaining his M.A. degree in Second Language Studies from the University of Hawai‘i at Manoa, he moved on to teach English in various contexts, from international school to public day school. As a seasoned English teacher, he has endeavored to apply his research background to the secondary school practice in China. His research and teaching interests include second language writing, technology-enhanced language learning, and language assessment.

McLoughlin, David

David McLoughlin is an Associate Professor in the School of Global Japanese Studies at Meiji University in Tokyo, Japan. His main area of research is motivation in second language learning, looking in particular at the role of interest in supporting and sustaining self-regulated motivation and learning. Other research areas include the role of affect in language learning and its importance for self-regulated learning; attribution theory and language learning motivation; and language learner autonomy.

Mynard, Jo

Jo Mynard is a professor, Director of the Self-Access Learning Center, and Director of the Research Institute for Learner Autonomy Education at Kanda University of International Studies in Chiba, Japan. She holds an Ed.D. in TEFL from the University of Exeter, UK, and an M.Phil. in Applied Linguistics from Trinity College, University of Dublin, Ireland. She is the founding editor of Studies in Self-Access Learning Journal, and has also co-edited and co-authored several books related to learner autonomy and advising in language learning.

Saito, Yukiko

Yukiko Saito is Lecturer in the Japanese language programme at the Centre for Language Studies of the National University of Singapore. She is completing her PhD research at the University of South Australia on teachers’ conception of culture and its enactment in teaching. Her research interests include intercultural language learning.

Sajiki, Atsuko

Atsuko Sajiki is Associate Professor of Japanese Language Teaching Practices in the Graduate Program in Global Communication and Language, Akita International University. She received an M.A. in Japanese Language Pedagogy from Columbia University, an M.S. in Education and a Ph.D. in Language Education from Indiana University. Her current research interests are: teaching Japanese culture in Japanese as a foreign language settings, and applying drama techniques in language education.
Sato, Shinji

Dr. Shinji Sato is the Director of the Japanese Language Programme at Princeton University. He completed his Ph.D. in anthropology and education from Teachers College, Columbia University. His works critically examine self-evident notions in Japanese language education including learning, culture, communication, competence, and creativity. He also proposes alternative classroom practices. Sato is the co-author of several publications, including Rethinking Language and Culture in Japanese Education (Multilingual Matters, 2014). He is currently editing books on welfare linguistics, ecological approach, and language education.

Sato, Takeshi

Takeshi Sato obtained an M.A. from Keio University and an M.A. in TESOL from the Institute of Education, which is now part of University College London. He is an Associate Professor in the Division of Language and Culture Studies at the Tokyo University of Agriculture and Technology, Japan. His current academic interests are applied cognitive linguistics, L2 vocabulary acquisition, and computer- and mobile-assisted language learning. His articles can be found in several academic journals such as TESOL Quarterly, and ReCALL, and he recently published a book on Implementing Mobile Language Learning Technologies in Japan (Springer Education).

Shroff, Ronnie H.

Ronnie H. Shroff is a Senior Project Fellow with the Hong Kong Polytechnic University. Dr. Shroff holds a Ph.D. in Information Systems from the City University of Hong Kong. His publications and research involve developing theoretical frameworks and applying qualitative, quantitative and mixed methods approaches to educational research, including evaluating different pedagogies in terms of emerging concepts and practices in the use of cutting-edge technologies to support social-constructivist, collaborative, active and outcome-based approaches to learning. His academic interests explore the optimum methods by which innovations in technology are able to support, enrich and transform teaching and learning.

Sugiyama, Akiko

Akiko Sugiyama was Professor and The Head of Japanese Language Teaching Practices of the Graduate Program in Global Communication and Language, Akita International University. She received an Ed.M. in Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) and a Ph.D. in Second/Foreign Language Education from the State University of New York at Buffalo. Her research interests were: creating a framework for Action Research for her graduate program, and beliefs in teacher trainers. She passed away in July, 2018.

Szirmai, Monika

Monika Szirmai received her Ph.D. in Linguistics from the University of Debrecen, Hungary, after completing a Master’s course in TEFL/TESL at the University of Birmingham, U.K. She is a Professor at Hiroshima International University, where she has been working since 1998. Her research interests are manifold: corpus linguistics, plurilingualism and pluriculturalism, the use of technology in language education, and the CEFR, to name a few. She has been tutoring for the Birmingham Distance MA course in TESOL since 2001. She is an associate member of PLIDAM, a research team at INALCO, Paris.
Takahashi, Wataru

Wataru Takahashi received his Ph.D. in Japanese education from the Tokyo University of Foreign Studies in 2018. He is now a lecturer at the Kanda University of International Studies, and is teaching Japanese language and culture. He has been conducting extensive reading (ER) sessions/classes in Japanese since 2010. His current research interests include learner autonomy, out-of-class L2 learning, online ER classes, and teachers’/students’ longitudinal perceptions of ER.

Umino, Tae

Tae Umino received her Ph.D. in Applied Linguistics from the UCL Institute of Education, University of London, and is Professor at the Institute of Japan Studies, Tokyo University of Foreign Studies. Her research currently focuses on self-instruction, out-of-class L2 learning, L2 learning in study-abroad, and the use of visuals in narrative inquiry. She recently published a chapter in P. Kalaja and Melo-Pfeifer, S. (Eds.) Visualising multilingual lives: More than words (Multilingual Matters, 2019) and has published articles in journals such as System and the Modern Language Journal.

Wee, Lian-Hee

Lian-Hee Wee is Professor of linguistics at the Hong Kong Baptist University where he is also Associate Dean of Arts. He researches mainly on phonological patterns of Chinese languages and Singapore and Hong Kong varieties of English and has (co-)authored/edited nine books and numerous articles, including Phonological Tone (Cambridge University Press, 2019) and a creative prose “Hong Kong Food Runes” (World Literature Today, Spring 2019). His recent attempts are at expanding the latitudes of Hong Kong English and Cantonese through literary expressions.

Yassin, Muzzammil

Muzzammil Yassin is a teacher & practitioner in the field of Teaching Arabic as a Foreign Language (TAFL). He had taught Arabic at the Arabic Language Institute (ALI) in the American University in Cairo and in various language centres and institutions in Singapore. He is currently teaching at the Centre for Language Studies.